Dear Prime Minister,

Our names are Hermione, Tom and Oliver and we are pupils at Eastington Primary School in Gloucestershire. Our right to an education has been upheld by our caring teachers and their brilliant lessons.

This made us think about children in Syria and how they shouldn't be caught in conflict. If others are being denied of their rights, you (as our Prime Minister) must do something to stop this. Rights shouldn't be denied.

These crises have left many feeling scared and intimidated all the time. As Prime Minister you must do everything you can to protect rights in humanitarian emergencies. Remember, a child needs protecting, no matter where they are from.

Our school has been working on Unicef's Outright project and we've been talking about children's rights world-wide; we've spent a lot of time expressing our views about this. A child can be protected through the right to an education. Schools are safe in the United Kingdom; however schools in some other places, such as Syria, are under threat. Their schools are no longer safe as they're being bombed and disrupted by soldiers. Basically, their right to safety isn't being upheld.

As we are sure you know, in the near future, global leaders will gather for the first time to discuss these humanitarian crises. Ahead of this meeting, we would like you to make sure that the United Kingdom is doing all it can to protect children's rights in humanitarian emergencies.

Yours sincerely,

Hermione, Tom and Oliver
(On behalf of the RRS steering group at Eastington Primary School)
